

Children's Investment Fund Foundation Commitment

Narrative:

Over the next four years – to end-2026 – CIFF intends to invest $325 million to support partners to meet the SRHR needs of the poorest and most discriminated individuals in key FP2030 focus regions (Central Africa; East and Southern Africa; Asia and the Pacific, ensuring equitable growth in contraceptive prevalence, reduction in unsafe abortion and supporting national plans to advance a demographic transition.

This will include a deep focus on equitable access to a wide basket of choices desired by users and that address barriers and attract new adopters; accountable and effective systems at the global and local level that support user decisions; and a cross-cutting commitment to gender transformative programming.

Under equitable access, we intend to:

Commit at least 50% of our funding to those communities and countries that have the lowest contraceptive prevalence. This will include expanding last-mile FP knowledge and access across underserved communities in the Sahel; expanding method mix in India in alignment with the national FP2030 strategy; supporting countries to scale contraceptive self-injection enabling access to four million individuals.; and localizing supply resilience, cost-reduction and go-to-market strategies for FP innovations – including on-demand contraception, multi-purpose prevention tools, and long-acting methods for men and women.

Under accountable and effective systems, we intend to:

- Reduce the financing gap for FP commodities and for key delivery platforms; support country leadership over market interventions; support the implementation of high-impact SRH policies and practices; and expand infrastructure to mitigate opposition to SRHR. This will include delivering resilient contraceptive markets for at least three product categories under SEMA Reproductive Health; attracting new funding and galvanizing closer and more effective donor coordination with domestic funding for priority FP needs; continuing to strengthen normative guidance, policy-change and a community-of-practice for de-medicalized and self-managed SRH; and building sector resilience by tackling disinformation and regressive actions that undermine rights. We intend to also invest in the FP2030 platform, supporting its leadership and role to track progress and hold partners to account.

Under cross-cutting gender transformative programming we intend to:

- Create improved conditions for FP access and uptake by investing in the integrated needs of girls as they enter adulthood and incorporating education and livelihoods alongside SRH interventions.
- Generate evidence on high-potential social norms interventions which address the underlying causes of gender inequality, to inform programmatic and funding priorities.

- Through CIFF's Girl Capital Africa strategy, encourage partners and decision makers to consider the breadth and depth of challenges facing adolescent girls, including reproductive health, education and livelihoods.
- Support our strategic partners in embedding gender transformative approaches into service delivery and demand creation interventions.
- Democratise access to decision-making on FP, supporting youth-led and women-led movements and grassroots organisations to engage in decision-making processes and in global infrastructure on issues of reproductive justice and rights. This will include investments to support youth and CSO engagement in the Generation Equality Forum.

Please note that this commitment is subject to change and may be updated in reporting in future years.

Outcomes:

- CIFF intends to support partners to reach 50 million individuals (of which at least nine million are adolescents) with access to SRHR services. Averting an estimated 56 million unintended pregnancies, 22.5 million unsafe abortions, integrating HIV prevention, and leveraging other funding.
- Scaled access to self-managed care, with self-injectable contraception accessible to four million individuals.
- Mechanisms in place that increases sustained funding for FP commodities
